Dodging Serbia's mortars on the road to Vukovar

THE drive down Frankopanska street belween Vinkovci and Nustar is only to be recommended at high speed, with the option of a swift bailing out of the moving car into the nearest ditch in mind.

The bubble of mortar fire in the fields around was distant like background music. Bul suddenly the thud was close, 100 yards away perhaps. Closer examination of the circumstances was impossible lying face down in the nettles with a hefty fellow passenger sprawled on top.

Yesterday even the Croat guardsmen had pulled back from here to Vinkovci. "Too much Cbetniks", said Branco Duilo, sitting in the army has once again turned its attention to Vinkovci over the past days. The Croats are anxious to keep the town as a base from which they bone to enter Vukovar and end the siege. although they admit that they are too weak to do it with only the men they have now."They have been promising us special troops from Zagreb. Then we storm Vukovar," said Branco hopefully. But there is no sign of relief yet.

Nustar has been dev-astated by the relentless shell and mortar attacks of the past week. Of the low houses, painted in pretty pastels, only wrecks remain. Their owners have fled. When they come back, if they ever do, they will find a large pile of rubble where their village once stood.

The Jack Daniels Cafe, which held out as the last post of hospitality until last

With the army bombarding Vukovar and its environs with renewed intensity, the battle for Slavnnia is entering a new and fierce phase with both sides taking advantage of the last of the summer weather.

This is the triangle of land between Osijek, Vukovar and Vinkovci where the rhythm of life is dominated by the fighting which starts at lunchtime and gathers force as night descends.

The Croat guards here fear that a big advance by the

This would give the alliance of Serbs and federal forces control over the heart of Slavania, the chief prize hankered after by Serbia. The officer said he feared Continued on page 18, col 3

Police charity rejects Libyan 'blood money' for killing of WPC

WPC Fletcher: victim of Libya shooting

CRIME CORRESPONDENT

A NATIONAL police charity has decided to refuse a cheque for £250,000 offered by Libya as atonement for the shooting of WPC Yvonne Fletcher in London seven years ago because the country has supported such groups as the IRA.

A cheque from the Libyan Police Syndicate, said to represent the country's police officers, was offered to the Police Dependants' Trust in June after Sir Teddy Taylor, the Conservative MP for Southend East, returned from a visit to Tripoli. At the time there was widespread anger at what was secretary at the Home Office, said seen as a cynical attempt by a formal approach would be made Colonel Gadaffi to restore relations with Britain.

Diplomatic relations were broken off after WPC Fletcher, aged 25, died in April 1984 at the hands of a gunman firing from the Libyan People's Bureau in St James's Square, off Pail Mall, as she policed a demonstration in April. Thirty officials claiming diplomatic status were expelled from Britain.

Yesterday, after four months' deliberation, the dependants' trustees, led by Sir Clive Whitmore, the permanent under to the Charity Commissioners to absolve the trustees from taking the money. In a statement the trust, whose board includes Sir Peter Imbert, commissioner of the Metropolitan police, and leaders of police professional organisations, said under charity law the trustees had to give priority to the financial interests of their charity and its beneficiaries. This normally required them to accept unconditional gifts of mooey no matter the source, but the statement said: "The trustees have concluded they should not accept the donation because of the Libyan authorities' record of support for terrorist organisations including the IRA who have been responsible for the deaths of British police officers."

According to the Charity Commissioners the trust has already asked informally for advice and can take whatever action it wishes. If the trust wants its action reviewed and blessed by the High Court, however, it must obtain approval from the commis-

Alan Eastwood, chairman of the Police Federation and one of the trustees, said he fully endorsed the action of the trust. Mike Bennett, spokesman for the Metropolitan Police Federation branch, said: "No amount of mooey could ever replace Yvoane and we think the decision to refuse the money is right. We were appailed that someone could offer money in an attempt to compensate for that dastardly act and are thankful that people cannot be bought." George Foulkes, Labour's foreign affairs spokesman, described the decision as honourable. "It's

Sir David Steel, Liberal Democrat foreign affairs spokesman, said: "It's right that the police should reject this money. Without an apology and without the perpetrators being brought to justice, this is blood money which they can well do without."

Sir Teddy said he was "genuinely surprised" to hear of the decision. He was distressed about the time it took the trust to come to its decision. "I feel that the matter has been dealt with in such a discourteous manner that it's a little bit insulting," he said.

Aberfan still pays the price of coal By TIM JONES

IN a corner of Aberfan cemetery the flowers are always fresh and yesterday, after the rain, they danced in the sun. Behind them, like silent white sentinels, the arched headstones bear witness to one of the worst disasters in Britain.

On Monday, as they have done on every October 21 for 25 years, the villagers will again gather to commemorate the awful day when the huge coal tip collapsed and devastated Pant-glas primary school, killing 116 children and 28 adults.

Within hours, the name of Abertao was flashed throughout the world as men and women, stripped of fear and oblivious to danger, tore at the clinging shurry with their bare hands.

South Wales had always known the price of coal and women lived in fear of hearing the colliery sirens signalling a disaster. But Aberfan was different. The little children were safe in school and, damo' it, it should not have happened.

The scars have not healed nor will they. Some parents lost their faith in God while others have found strength through religion. The great glue which binds them together is their community spirit

Some stories about that day are so awful they still make people shudder. On the morning of the disaster, a

Blandford loses jail appeal

The Marquess of Blandford lost his appeal yesterday against a three-mouth jail sentence for driving while disqualified. He was sent back to Oxford jail, where he has spent the last 11 days cleaning showers and doing the laundry, with a warning that he could have been given an even greater penalty.

Judge John Slack, dismissing the appeal at Aylesbury crown court, Buckinghamshire, told the 35-year-old heir to the 11th Duke of Marlborough: "It is our view that the magistrates may well have been justified in imposing in total a greater sentence than they did in fact impose."

Blandford's appeal was against the two six-week jail entences imposed by magistrates at Beaconsfield for two offences of driving while banned and offences of driving while disqualified.

Michael de Navarro, QC for Blandford, told Judge Slack that his client had been chastened by his time in jail.

Mr Greenway is also alleged to have lied on a British nationality application for Norbert Jurasek, Plasser's managing director. THE NUCLEAR WASTE COVER-UP.

There are people who would have you believe that we're less than open about what we do with nuclear waste at Sellafield.

The truth is, the only cover-up is the cover-up of the waste itself. So what exactly is nuclear waste? How is it different from all the other types of waste produced by industry? The simple answer is that it is radioactive. And because of this it has to be managed with care.

But let's not over-react. Nuclear waste should be put in context with other, often more hazardous, materials. Highly infectious hospital waste, and some industrial waste containing mercury, for instance, may remain hazardous for ever. Radioactive waste decays with time.

The key to how safe it can be, is how properly it is managed and looked after. That's why we at British Nuclear Fuels are spending over £2 billion on a programme which allows us to continue dealing safely with nuclear waste.

A major misconception is that all nuclear waste is the same.

Not true. In fact, it falls into three distinct types which emit varying intensities of radiation.

Consequently, they are safely dealt with in completely different ways.

The most radioactive is High Level Waste, which results from reprocessing spent nuclear fuel.

We can recycle 97% of spent fuel into new fuel. It is the remaining 3% waste that must be carefully dealt with.

At present, high level waste is stored inside double-walled, cooled stainless steel tanks enclosed in thick concrete walls.

However, we have brought into operation a process called 'vitrification', in which liquid waste is turned into powder, converted into glass and sealed inside stainless steel containers to be kept safe for the indefinite future.

This method reduces the waste to 1/3 of its original volume.

Or, if you want to look at it another way, all the high level waste produced at Sellafield in the last 30 years could easily be contained in just 4 double-decker buses.

A far less radioactive type of nuclear waste, known as Intermediate Level Waste, occurs when the nuclear fuel rods are stripped in the first mechanical stage of reprocessing.

The scrap metal, sludge and residues that are involved in this operation are sealed in cement inside stainless steel drums, and stored in our special encapsulation plant until a suitable long-term home has been found.

The least radioactive waste of all is Low Level Waste, such as paper towels, gloves, protective clothing and laboratory equipment which not only come from the nuclear industry but from hospitals, research laboratories and other industries where radioactive materials are handled.

Despite the fact that radiation from low level waste is negligible, we take no chances in the way that we deal with it.

At Drigg in Cumbria, we have built and use a concrete vault the size of 12 football pitches, and we are developing a method of compacting this type of waste, which means Drigg won't be full until well into the 21st Century.

Intensive investigations have been carried out at sites at Sellafield and at Dounreay in Scotland to assess their suitability as a deep underground repository for intermediate and low level radioactive waste. Sellafield has been chosen as the site at which further investigations will be concentrated.

If you'd like to know more about the way we manage nuclear waste, write to British Nuclear Fuels, Information Services (CU), Risley, Warrington WA3 6AS for our nuclear waste brochure.

Better still why not come and visit us at the Sellafield Visitors Centre in West Cumbria. You'll discover that the future of nuclear waste couldn't be in safer hands.

In Wales many of the county councils created when local government was last reorganised in 1974 were given new names and covered much larger areas.

Unlike their English counterparts, who have found it hard to argue for the retention of artificial creations like Avon and Humberside, the Assembly of Welsh Counties has sought to emphasise their strengths.

Dr William George, leader of Gwynedd and chairman of the assembly, said: "This gov-ernment has always been dedicated to cost-efficiency and yet the Welsh counties have demonstrated the benefits of the economies of scale."

He said the districts' plans only emphasised "the need to examine the structure of local government in Wales much more carefully than the government proposes".

García denies graft

From REUTER

ALAN García, the former president, defending himself before the Peruvian senate, denied accusations that he illegally enriched himself in office. He told the senate on Thursday that the allegations were the product of "hate" by his political enemies.

Earlier this week a senate commission ratified the findings of a chamber of deputies panel that he enriched himself by about $400,000 (£341,000) during 14 years as a public servant. "I've been presented as the Shah of Persia with vast fortunes, corruption with the BCCl and, in the end, what is hrought here is [that I enriched myself by] $187,000 during my term as president," Señor García said. "This is what my accusers say. I say it is not even one dollar." Señor Garcia has been enmeshed in corruption charges linked to BCCI - the Bank of Credit and Commerce International - since Robert Morgenthau. the Manhaitan district-attorney, named his government's officials as having taken bribes for depositing up to $270 million from Peru's reserves in the bank.

Disappearing hemlines: Karl Lagerfeld's 1992 collection, shown in Paris yesterday, featured an ultrashort strappy tunic in navy and cream braided stripes, left, a hlack bodyshirt worn with a flower-printed half-leotard over tights, and a gunmetal corselet with matching tights. Lagerfeld's commitment to high hemlines, or indeed just a pair of tights worn with no skirt at all, is as strong a trend as ever (Liz Smith writes from Paris). He opened his show with a whole group, of gun-metal Lycra corselets, bikinis and bodyshirts. The latter garments, half-shirt and halfleotard, reappeared later in the collection in the flowered chiffon form with matching diaphanous scarf skirts. Lagerfeld knows, of course, that most of his customers will not be running around in their underwear next year. Ozal faces election defeat

From Andrew Finkel

TURKEY's 30 million vnters appear ready in temperow's general election to vote nut President Ozal's Mntherland party, which has been in nffice since the military relinquished power in 1983.

The determination of voters to bring down the government does unt. however, appear matched by enthusiasm for any alternative. "For the first time I haven't the slightest idea how in vute," an Istanhul architect said.

Under an excessively complex system of proportional representation, a party needs at least 20 per cent of the vote to qualify for seats in any one constituency. The Motherland party's lingering hope is that people will remember it as the party of Turkey's economic transformation and that it might win if support for other parties is evenly divided.

As well as being hlamed for the current high rate of inflation, the Motherland party is being hurt by a reputation for arbitrary and corrupt government which the apposition and much of the press attribute to the family and retinue of Mr Ozal.

Freedom itself demands the infidel's conversion

he Council of Christians and Jews has protested at the prospect of the Church of England seeking to convert members of other faiths - Jews in particular - to Christianity. In a letter to The Times on Tuesday, the executive director of the council, the Rev Jim Richardson, and Michael Latham MP, a council member, insisted that relations between faiths should be based on equal dialogue - and it was a condition of dialogue that no religion should claim to have a monopoly of truth.

What sparked off this protest was news of an "open letter", signed by leading Anglican conservatives, Evangelicals and Anglo-Catholics, attacking the practice of inter-faith worship such as the annual Commonwealth Day Service of Observance in Westminster Abbey. It argued that the church should not be shy of trying to convert members of non-Christian faiths.

The target of the open letter and the campaign is not, in the first instance, the lewish community, nor any other non-Christian group, but those in the Church of England who are against, or unsure about, converting anybody to anything. In spite of it being a church which spent enormous efforts in the 19th century evangelising the British Empire, it is not uncommon to find a widespread, even predominant, view that "those days are over". Liberal Anglicans are uncomfortable with the notion. quoted in the open letter, that Jesus Christ is "the only saviour and hope of mankind".

ritish Jews are concerned by the prospect B of Christian evangelism, not least because they have bad collective memories of Christian mass conversion as a form of persecution. Judaism is not a proselytising religion and Jews tend to ask, therefore, why other religions cannot be content, as they are, with what they have.

The controversy is rife with cross-purposes. But the issue is not whether Christians have truly renounced antisemitism, whether Jews need to be converted to Christianity to be "saved", or whether the God Jews and Muslims worship is the "same" God that Christians worship. The real issue is what is meant by evangelism, proselytism and conversion; and the acceptable limits in practice.

The ideological market-place aspect of Western secular democratic society is not only one of its most attractive features (to Western secular democrats, at least) but is also essential to its proper functioning. It is necessarily an argumentative society, where each has his market stall, crying his wares. This applies to politics, art and science, and it must apply to religion, too. Those who hold strong views have the privilege - which verges on a duty - to advance or defend them. To deny people the right to believe that their religion has a monopoly of truth, and to allay the guilt of excessive persuade others accordingly, is to infringe their gaping hy reminding myself that religious freedom. Nobody should be offended by the claim: "My religion is better than yours".

ot everybody has to spend all day saying so, however, it can be done through institutions and by proxy. But the health of a society like Britain requires that somewhere there should be someone whose business it is to cultures. But I was soon addemonstrate to any who ask why Roman true one, and vice versa.

But there are three conditions necessary for keeping the religious peace: respect for intellectual and emotional freedom, respect for personal privacy, and avoidance of insult.

There is no place for coercion in religion (to paraphrase the Koran). Religious coercion against freedom of conscience can take the gross form of a threat of dire consequences, or the more subtle (but not necessarily less effective) one of psychological pressure.

Religious intrusion into personal privacy can arise from unwelcome persistence, the use of false pretences, or inappropriateness of timing and method such as occasions of grief or distress. But provided these three criteria for the etiquette of proselytism are met, there can be no objection to the effort of proselytism itself. To say otherwise is to reject a free society, and to insist that Christianity should become a closed system. something it is not.

Peter Lewis on the literary row raging over the publication of a new biography of George Orwell

Biography is such a booming business that George Orwell, whose dying re-Whose life was it anyway? quest in 1950 was to have none, is now on his second "authorised" biography in 11 years. Already, sniping has broken out on Horizon. His wife, Elleen, public life is to reduce him to the level of a dry functionary." Life, 1980) has complained that Crick, for his part, has described Shelden's book as "lumpy".

An enjoyable literary duel seems to be underway. The tangle arises because of a woman; it began with Orwell's deathbed marriage, in the last stages of tuberculosis, to Sonia Brownell, who ruled the Orwell estate as his literary executor for 30 years until her own death in 1980. She guarded Orwell's works ferociously, driving off would-be adaptors, film-makers and hiographers. Orwell's fricods, such as Anthony Pow-ell, restricted themselves to brief reminiscent essays. Sonia established the Orwell archive at University College, London, and co-edited Orwell's Collected Essays, Journalism and Letters. That, she said, was all the biography needed. Nevertheless, attempts to write Orwell's life continued, although she refused their authors permission to quole his writing. "If you try to write a proper biography, I shall stop you," she told me, when I was preparing (with her co-operation) an illustrated book on Orwell that had no such pretensions. She finally chose Crick to write an "official" life, hut disliked and disowned his book, and tried to stop its publication.

Orwell first met her in 1945 when she was Cyril Connolly's assistant (and editor in absentia) had died unexpectedly in 1945 leaving him with Richard, their adopted baby son. He needed a wife, and Sonia was one of three women to whom he proposed, and who all refused at that time. Although Orwell made her the model for Julia in Nineteen Eighty-Four, he did not see much more of her until 1949. when he was back in England and in hospital. This time, when he begged her to marry him, she agreed. Between then and his death, three months later, he

.her place in his life," he says. "She was quite wrong to appropriate the name of Orwell, a nom de plume which belonged only to him. He remained Eric Blair and that was her name by marrying him. But what sort of attention would she have got as Sonia Blair? She made no effort to be a mother to Richard."

Having adopted the name but not the son. Sonia has been made out by Sheldon - or so her friends allege - to have married Orwell for mercenary motives. Shelden writes: "She did not love Orwell and had doubts about the merits of his work, but knew that if they married, she would have money and a good cause to fight for." He denies accusing her of gold-digging, he rather sees her as a lion-hunter.

She had turned him down earlier, but when he was famous and about to become rich she found it easier to accept him. Also, he was so ill that she felt she couldn't say no, and she sincerely wanted to help him

Shelden also believes Sonia slanted the popular impession of Orwell when editing his essays and letters. "She withheld many of his political writings, which she didn't think important. She also deleted parts of his letters which show his lively interest in sex. They counteract the common picture of him as the man in a hair shirt. In general, Sonia was pretending to have the last word on Orwell." Peter Ackroyd reviews Orwell, by Michael Shelden, published by Heinemann (£18.50), in the Sat-

I plead as guilty as the next man to excessive gawping. The adenoidal ocular gulp was, in the late Fifties, my response to the rediscovery of civilisation after some years in Malaysian kampongs. I was often asked what kind of television we had "out there" and was met by incredulity when I replied that there was, as yet, none. Even in the old black-and-white twochannel days, there was an assumption in the West that the amenity was essential to the full life. Indeed, the need had long antedated its satisfaction. Is there not a television system in Robert Green's play Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay, first

For more than two years, as television critic for the now defunct Listener, I was glad to I was being paid for it. Leaving Britain for good in 1968, I was freeing myself from the seduction of three colour channels. I did not think I would be any longer seducible, for I would be an outcast at the feast of alien dicted to high-kicking Canzo-Italiana. Language was no real barrier. It soon seemed natural to hear Gary Cooper enlering a salon with, "Ciao, ragazzi".

in Monaco, the televisual feast was multinational, with all of France and Italy pounding in over the notional frontiers. Lengthy stays in the United States revealed that vast regions were ascetically provided with only a single channel, although New York's provisions were so rich as to provoke genuine illness: the old movies that one had to see came on in the early hours of the morning and the rhythms of regular sleep were dangerously disrupted.

At present I spend much of my time in southern Switzerland, where there are uncount-

A generation ago, television was the wonder of the age. Now, grave. Viewing goes on, but there is little of the relief of a return to my own language: I hear far too much unintelligible yobspeak. But I have to concede that Britain's is the best tele-vision you are likely to get, though praising it reminds me of the damned in Ezra Pound's Cantos who praise one kind of human excrement at the expense of another.

The truth is that what we call television is not television at all. There was once talk of the Art of Television, meaning the exploi-tation of accepted limitations. The parallel was the Art of Radio, which genuinely flour-ished in the 1930s: an amhitious expressionism which owed much to the Weimar Republic functioned before blattnerphone recording came in, when Early television was live, and there was the faint thrill of knowing that lines could be muffed and things could go wrong. Characters could not change their clothes. A door could be opened to disclose a staring camera. There was the sense of limitation without which no art can properly be said to exist.

owadays, television is a poor sister of film. With the advent of the video cassette recorder, it has become possible to regard one's television set as the disgorger of the materials of one's personal film museum. The television play no longer exists: the television film, an impoverished relation of hypertrophic cinema, follows cine-

It is too easy: one lolls in one's slippers and shirtsleeves instead of sitting with others in a wet raincoat. This domestication of the cinema diminishes a great medium. We see one film, yawn, and at once demand another. We zap, and we do not sufficiently zap off. I do not deny that I have learnt things from television chiefly about animals - but I have not, whoo I consider the hours I have given to it, learnt nearly enough. There has not been one single television revelation to compare with, say, the first hearing of L'après-midi d'un faune or the first reading of A Handful of Dust. The cramming of each minute of the day and night with viewable material ensures that no transdiscriminate.

In its first days - I am not referring to such events as that transmission on the Baird system of Pirandello's The Man with the Flower in his Mouth, which I saw in 1932; I am going back merely to the 1950s - one was addressed directly by the medium. Orwell's Nineteen Eighty-Four reproduces the condition of 1948, when old ladies were shy of undressing before that seeing eye. At least there was a sense of rapport. To have lugged the victim of IRA hullets into the studio and shown him, as it were, dead live, would have been shocking and violently condemned by Parliament, hut at least it would have been a televisual act. These days we see coloured film of the victims of every conceivable atrocity, and its epistemological impact is that of an aftershave commer-cial. Death is entertainment because it is processed as cotertainment: film is manipulable and hence fictional.

A few years ago I met a Hollywood producer who was convinced that BBC television transmitted a Shakespeare or Chekhov play once a week, showed the odd documentary of a potter's wheel, dealt hriefly with the news, and then lapsed into blankness. It was a false memory of the 1950s and a response to the hlaring, glaring TV diet of Los Angeles. But some of us can recollect a time when television sets had doors which were ritually opened on an occasional evening and closed at the hour of the sleepinducing malted drink, ommercialisation has disposed of the genteel era of limited viewing. The filling of the day and night with material so mediocre that it imparts artistic value to commercials is imposed on the BBC because the BBC has been taught to believe it has entered the competitive market. It is up to the viewer to learn discrimination, but this is different when homogeneity of value - and, it increasingly seems, of content - animates the programmers.

The answer is to keep the thing switched off until a re-run of The Birth of a Nation of Metropolis is announced. Even then, of course, television will be behaving, not as itself, but as medium. Or perhaps Parade's End by Ford Madox Ford (made in 1964) will emerge from the BBC2 archives: that was television serving literature, a wholly laudable action. I think we have to liquidate the notion of the TV evening. We seem to have forgotten that there are other things to do. We can listen. to a concert on Radio 3, read, make love, play the piano or the guitar. The trouble is that we have become afraid of missing something on the box.

In fact, we are missing nothing. We get more news from newspapers and more cotertainment from library books. Television has to exist, but it does not have to ensiave us. But then, the franchise winners are the real slaves.

n a contemplative fashion, hide evidence which is imand a tranquil frame of mind, free from every kind of passion, some solution let us find. Let us grasp the situation, solve the complicated plot; quiet, calm deliberation disentangles every knot.

But things don't work like that, neither in real life nor in operetta. I suppose that in a perfect republic, politics and newspapers would be run by pure logic, free from every kind of passion and fallacy. In fact, our world runs on emotion. passion, muddle, fallacy, confusion and downright lies. A formal fallacy is a mathematical error in deductive logic, in which the conclusion does not necessarily follow from the premisses: the Tories believe in privatisation of national assets as a principle, therefore they are going to privatise the National Health Service. That is a non sequitur, with touches of other kinds of informal fallacy.

Populist politics and journalism would come to a halt if all kinds of informal fallacy were banned. And the world would be a duller place. Nevertheless, in the hurly burly of public and private debate, we should try to keep a grip on our logic, and our eyes open for fallacies. For example, at all the party con-ferences we have just been treated to an orgy of the fallacy of slanting, that is, deliberately omitting, playing down, or exaggerating certain points to the exclusion of others, in order to portant and relevant to the conclusion of an argument. The fallacy of systematic slanting is a definition of party politics and editorials in the less expensive papers. You can hear it every day, passim, in arguments about the NHS and the economy. Without slanting, the public relations and advertising industries would have no occupation left. And there is no point in crying "good riddance". We live in the real world, not Utopia. We have had a virulent epidemic of the tu quoque fallacy on both sides of the Atlantie lately. You know the kind of argument. He is quite unfitted to be DPP because he was kerbcrawling. He is quite unfitted to be a high court judge, because it was alleged he went in for sexual harassment. Both statemoots may be pragmatically and politically true. It depends on the circumstances and extent of the kerb-crawling and sexual harassment. But the argument is messy and political, human not logical. Neither statement follows logically from its premiss. The tu quoque consists of producing evidence that a person's actions are not consistent with what he is arguing. "He tells us that we must have no pay rise for the next year, but he has just got himself a new Rolls Royce." Directors' pay rises have produced a pox of tu quoques and plain envy. But neither the tu quoque nor the envy logically destroys the argument about how we should get nut of the

Another form of the tu quoque is to argue that a person's views are inconsistent with what he previously believed, and therefore (a) he is not to be trusted and/or (b) his new view must logically be rejected. "Freda Bullfrog was passionately against European federation whoo she was standing for Parliament. Now she is passionately for it. How can you trust someone who has changed her mind no such an important issue? Her present position is inconsistent with her former view, and therefore we should commit it to the flames."

Sometimes the tu quoque is related to the fallacy of two wrongs making a right. "The Tory tabloid press goes in for character assassination and lying. Therefore you should not condemn the Labour tabloid press for doing the same." It is the "therefore" that is logically dodgy in that sentence. If we were all absolutely logical in our words and deeds, we should be inhuman, and insufferable robots of rationality.

The fallacy of the red herring shifts the argument sideways. "Yon believe in abortion, so why don't you support the enthanasia bill to allow people to die with dignity?" Logic, like whisky, loses its beneficial effect when taken in too large quantities. Humankind cannot bear very much logic. But it is a useful tool for keeping an eye on those rascally politicos and journos.

1F. AS expected, James Baker succeeds in getting the different parties to agree to a Middle East peace conference in Madrid, his problems will only just be beginning. The US Secretary of State knows that, after eight months of painstaking shuttle diplomacy, the success or failure of the initiative could well have more to do with what in diplomatic speak are known as "modalines" than the grander sweeps of geo-politics. Modalities include such burning questions as: will the negotiating table be round or square? Who will speak first? Who goes last? Will there be alcohol on the lunchtime menu? Will the Arah delegates be able to face Mecca? Then, of course, most tricky of all, who sits next to whom?

The history of diplomacy suggests that it is on such questions thal success stands or falls. In January 1972 the Vietnam peace talks in Paris nearly foundered over the seating arrangements and, indeed, the shape of the table. The day was saved by compromising on an oval table which was then separated into four distinct sections, so the North and South Vietnamese delegates could be satisfied that they were not sitting next to each other. Michael Leifer, Professor of International Relations at the London School of Economics, says: "Although these things may seem ridiculous, and perhaps they are ridiculous, they have symbolic significance. All governments are still playing to domestic consid-

Baker will be hoping the conference goes more smoothly than the Arah League Summit in Cairo shortly after the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. That ended with food and dinner plates flying through the air, and with a tearful Kuwaiti foreign minister being helped from the room after being struck by a lamb kebah thrown by his Iraqi counterpart.

NEIL Kinnock has turned to Peter Mandelson, his former right-hand man, to try to ensure a Labour victory in the crucial Langbaurgh hy-election. Mandelson's role will be controversial, because it was his involvement in the Monmouth by-election earlier this year which exacerbated the divisions among Labour staff which led to the resignation of John Underwood, who had succeeded Mandelson as Labour's communications director. Mandelson will also come under scrutiny from Tory and Liberal Democrats opponents to see whether there is a conflict of interest between his work for the Labour party, and his position as a consultant to the BBC.

Meanwhile William Hague, at 30 the Tories' youngest MP, has been sent to Langbaurgh as the minder to Michael Bates, the Tory candidate. Traditionally, minders are experienced MPs. So why Hague? He was the last Tory to have won a hy-election, nearly three years ago.

SEX AT WORK

Thomas case sent an echo far beyond the Senate room, far beyond America's shores. The reason is simple. The alleged incident between Judge Thomas and Professor Anita Hill can be replicated in almost every workplace where women mix with men. The openness of the American constitution has starkly exposed not just a personal anguish but a dark side of human behaviour, hardly discussed. Rarely have so many people broken through a taboo so thoroughly.

Dr Hill did not accuse Judge Thomas of breaking any law, though laws on sexual harassment exist in America and elsewhere. Her accusation was that be transgressed the frontier between the acceptable and the unacceptable in relations between the sexes. and did so at work. This frontier lies across the most mysterious territory in human nature. Its exploration has given rise to great art and great writing, to fierce gender war and now to intractable litigation. Defining sexual harassment, particularly when it takes verbal rather than physical form, continues to vex those concerned with women's rights and sexual equality. The Thomas/Hill case has shown how far from realisation is the concept of "gender-neutral relationships" between human beings.

Many women have felt liberated by the past week's debate. They have found in Dr Hill's testimony a public affirmation that "no means no". They have yearned to draw attentioo to the blight that unwarranted sexual attention can cast over their lives. Since such harassment can be both personally distressing and damaging to a career, the humiliation is often suffered in secret. Dr Hill and others now bringing their experiences to light have stripped away some of that secrecy.

Other women have felt the outcome of the Thomas/Hill conflict as a defeat. Dr Hill complained, and apparently was oot beheved. She was humiliated. Women with similar grievances have asked themselves whether they will fare any better, whether society's polite concern to prevent harassment in general is undermined by the absence of coovincing remedies in particular.

The reaction of many men to the case has been different and often confused. The most fundamental male characteristic, that of sexual assertiveness, may historically have been sublimated into a subtle game of give and take across that notoriously undefined frontier. Already the campaign for gender equality has led to a review of stereotypes in the workplace, in education, in family life, in social relationships."

At least to many males, however, much of female dress and make-up still seems designed to attract the opposite sex, even if most women dress and decorate to please themselves. Women may claim that men do not understand their sensitivities but male feelings can also be teased and hurt. Men complain of the uncertainty of knowing when a response is invited and when oot, and of not knowing when acceptable flirtation has become unacceptable harassment.

How far any real confusion underlay the Thomas/Hill case is unclear. What the case has demonstrated is how painfully these confusioos carry over from social relations to occupational ones. However much women and men may plead for "equality of respect and treatment" at work, sexual behaviour patterns affect life in office, shop and factory. Indeed, the incidence of affairs and marriages shows that both sexes regard the workplace as a valid arena for the

Last week's hearings in the Clarence interplay of sexuality. Strict gender blindness is fanciful. Not only are there tasks that men may perform better than women and vice versa. The sexes often seek different rewards and satisfactions from their employment: hence the development of "mommytrack" career structures in America and elsewhere. Non-discrimination may be enforced, glass ceilings may be smashed by determined emancipation. But sexuality will always affect relations between men and women, at work as anywhere. Nor is the victim always a woman. A third of those who call sexual harasement help-lines are

Attempts to regulate "unacceptable and offensive behaviour" out of existence, to define a legal boundary between the acceptable and unacceptable, range from the inept to the ludicrous. Like similar attempts to protect personal privacy, the law's objectivity is too blust for the subtle balance between offensive acts and insufferable distress on the one hand and hurt feelings unavoidable in a rough world on the other.

After more than a century of fighting for equal status in employment, it is galling for women to experience the crudest of inequalities surviving under the desk or behind the shed, in murmured obscenities and humiliating advances. A society that once regulated sexual encounter by genteel convention and then only for the genteel - must evolve new expressions of respect for women. Women too must recognise the impact that the projection of their sexuality can have on men, some would say bordering on harassment itself, and the disturbance to male feelings this can cause.

There is a role here for the law. A body of precedent and case law is developing on both sides of the Atlantic designed to prevent unwelcome physical contact between the sexes and to prevent sexual rebuff leading to workplace discrimination. Gradually such "attitude of mind" legislation should alter behaviour in the direction of greater respect for individuals of both sexes. Yet statute law is likely to prove a clumsy means of resolving the confusions and accidents that litter the human landscape. Better is recourse, first, to the modern skills of informal advice and communication between those who cannot adjust to sexual strains at work, and second to oldfashioned restraint and good manners. But harassment can be such a severe disturbance at work for many women that they are bound to want remedies offering more specific effectiveness. Codes of practice and internal grievance procedures are still necessary, not to be used in every case but to set a formal standard with which most employers and employees will want to comply informally. Proven sexual harassment should be a recognised disciplinary offence in employment contracts, and the offence treated as aggravated where sexual harassment involves abuse of a position of authority over another.

The role of women in every aspect of society is changing fast, which means that the role of men has to change too. The adjustments required are bound to be painful to both. The events of the past week have indicated that at this stage the changes are proving more painful to women, and this puts a special obligation onto men. People are slowly learning to show greater respect for each other in matters of race, religion and disability. While much in the realm of sex will remain of timeless mystery, at least in the workplace it must be freed from fear.

GREEN POWER-PLAY

The European Commissioner for the eovironment, Carlo Ripa di Meana, has sent Britain's transport minister, Malcolm Rifkind, a private letter asking him to halt all work on seven British construction projects. This personal request might have been justified if Britain had the appalling record of disregarding EC rules of, say, Spain or even Germany, which the Commissioo has had to take to court for breach of eovironmental directives five times more often than the United Kingdom. But that is not the case. The suspicioo must be that the commissioner thought Britain was a soft touch for a bit of good publicity.

The merits of this week's detailed claims against Britain by Brussels, issued at the same time, have yet to be decided. A formal warning letter from the European Commission claims that in going shead with seveo projects, including the Channel rail link, the East London River Crossing and the extension to the M3 through Twyford Down in Hampshire, the government has breached the EC environmental directive which came into force in July 1988. The letter further contends that a dozen acts of Parliament do oot meet the directive's requirements oo environmental impact assessments, and challenges the immunity British law grants the Crown estate from covironment legislatico.

This letter, however, is only the first stage in Commission proceedings against a polluting government. Only if the government's reply, due within two mooths, fails to "satisfy" the Commission would Brussels then issue a "reasoned opinioo" that Britain is io formal breach. Recourse to the European Court is the final step. Only the court has authority to order a stop to construction pending final judgment. Signor Ripa di Meana has, at the least, jumped a gun.

The EC directive does not abrogate to Brussels the authority to decide on a given project. That remains for the relevant regional or national authorities. What it does is to oblige governments to accept common rules for assessing their impact on the environment and to legislate accordingly. The spirit of the directive, which Britain has accepted, is that Europe has a "common heritage". It therefore covers not only pollution which would harm other countries, but drinking water, wetlands and bathing beaches, which concern only Britons - indeed it might be argued only local residents. Britain may have accepted a high degree of intervention in what should be matters for national or even local government. But it is absurd that Brussels has a remit to yet the legality under European law of a hospital incinerator, one of the seven projects in this week's list.

The legal argument over the seven projects is complex, but the EC's main charge is that the government was bound by the directive at the time it issued consent, and failed to observe the new rules. The government replies either that it had met the requirements, or that the project was "under way" before the directive came into force. The resulting argument may clarify what "under way" means and what is a "decision". The government appears to believe that the relevant date is publication of intent by a government department, not the environment secretary's final decision.

Britain should now be leading an overdue debate on the EC's powers to arbitrate domestic environmental management, before Brussels claims jurisdiction over the fall of the last sparrow in the land. That the EC should concern itself with the fate of individual woods and chimneys is bureaucratic interventionism gone mad. But Westminster would be better placed to protest if it were more in tune with the strength of its citizens' feelings. Twyford Down and Oxicas Wood have in common their beauty and the low value given to these irreplaceable landscapes in government road-building programmes.

To this extent, the government's insensitivity is now rebounding on its head. British lobbyists, who instigated this action, are increasingly looking to Brussels for help. This is at the root of the government's embarrassment, and the loss of confidence in Whitehall is an evil it can itself eradicate.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Ultimate power on life or death From Lord Alport

Sir, I read at breakfast Daniel Johnson's article ("True face of mercy killing", October !!) in which he argued that smicide and euthanasia are "the final obscenity". That afternoon i listened to the prime minister's passionate statement supporting the principle that we all have the "power to choose" (report, October 12). In the evening I read an account in the local paper of an elderly couple who locked themselves in their car in a favourite beauty spot not far from my home. set it on fire and apparently resisted all attempts to rescue them.
Finally, after reading the letters

(October 16) on Johnson's article I have been set wondering whether the ultimate "power to choose" is not power to choose to live or die. It is a problem no doubt of great theological, social, legal and moral complexity, but it is one arousing increasing public attention in the United Kingdom, the rest of Europe and the United States, Rather than leaving this immensely important issue to the mercies of best-selling tracts and contentious pressure groups, is there not a strong argument for making it the subject of a full-scale public enquiry?

Many people, not least the medical profession, would be grateful for the guidance which the report of such an enquiry would provide. Yours faithfully, ALPORT, House of Lords. October 17.

From the Chairman of St Christopher's Hospice Sir, The objection of those doctors involved with palliative medicine to a legalised individual right for euthanesia or assisted suicide does not merely presuppose a belief in Judaeo-Christian doctrine as Dr Elizabeth Wilson suggests in her letter (October 16), but rather a concern for the position of the vulnerable in our society.

Freedom to take one's own life as a private matter is very different from a legalised "right to die", which all too easily can lead to a presumed duty to die. It is difficult to see how the few who are so disabled that they cannot exercise personal choice can have the law for which they ask without undermin-ing the claims to care of the many.

All those working in palliative medicine know well how most requests for a speedy end to life fade away once good care has been instituted. That does not only take place in the work of hos but is now far more widespread, as the past decades have seen an increased programme of research and education in this field. To suggest killing before we have done all we can in caring would, to me, be the wrong answer to the present

Yours faithfully. CICELY SAUNDERS, Chairman. St Christopher's Hospice, 51-59 Lawrie Park Road, Sydenham, SE26.

From Mr Colin Harte

October 17.

Sir. The decriminalisation of suicide was neither intended to, nor indeed did it, create a "right" to commit snicide. Its purpose was to avoid punishing desperate and broken people who had attempted the ultimate action of despair.

Like the Voluntary Enthanceia Society, which has drawn up proposals for legislation, supporters of cuthanasia are suggesting that only those with incurable disabilities or terminal illnesses should be empowered to end their lives.

A genuine right to die would enable a physically fit 25-year-old like myself to end his life should he so choose. The proposed legislation, far from acknowledging a right to die, thus merely reveals a prejudice that vulnerable people — the sick, the disabled, the elderly — do not de-serve the same respect, dignity and proper medical care as other people. Yours faithfully, COLIN HARTE

Value of prayer

Farnham, Surrey.

From Mr Edward Smyth Sir, The Archbishop of York's description of prayer (letter, Octo-ber 9) as a "risky process of co-operation between God and his creatures" seems complementary to that of Blaise Pascal (1623-1662) who said that God had "invented prayer in order to endow Man with the dignity of causality". Yours faithfully, EDWARD SMYTH, Holly Mead, Churt.

October 13. From Miss Kathryn J. Kent Sir, God is able to foresee events in our future by existing outside space and time. He does not need to subject himself to their limitations in this respect to create the possibility of free will, since the fact that he foresees an action does not mean that he determines it. Yours faithfully. KATHRYN J. KENT. James Allen's Girls' School, East Dulwich Grove, Dulwich, SE22.

Electing the right voice for London Mufti on parade

From Sir Philip Goodhart. MP for Beckenham (Conservative) Sir. In your leading article on don could be a regular spur for London government ("Turn again ministers and civil servants in the Whittington", October 9) you call Department of Transport and for for the election of a "city-wide the managers of London's buses, mayor, whose financial and plan-ning powers would be strictly de-fined by statute". In the same paragraph you mention the prob-lems of Docklands, of London's teaching hospitals, and of the delays in building the Channel tunnel and Heathrow rail links.

Even if the new mayor's powers were very wide indeed, it is plain that these particular problems would still have to be tackled by ministers; and, as you say, "if ministers insist on taking decisions they had better carry the can for them alone".

But where should ministers carry these cans? In the past ten years the new departmental select committees have become an important political force. If a select committee of London's members of Parliament had been established when the Greater London Council was abol. strategy for the arts, the parks, sport ished, London's own elected MPs and not least tourism. would have been able to focus min-isters' minds on the city-wide prob-P. From Mrs Lindy Foster Sir, Thank you for Joanna Gibbon's article (Weekend Times, October 12) on the voluntary work of the Waterway Recovery Group, who are helping to clear the abandoned Wilts and Berks Canal. Such work plays a vital part in the natural revival of our canals. This revival is now threatened by the British Waterways General Power Bill, a private hill at present in transil through Parliament which seeks among other objectives to extinguish certain statutory rights deriving from some 500 different acts of Parliament which authorised the creation of the navigable waterways. These include the rights to moor boats, build and use wharves, and use the equipment necessary for boat maintenance.

Sir, Four British Library independent art advisors have resigned following the announcement that no government money is to be made available for works of art, including and not Lord Home of The Hirsel sculpture, in the forecourt (reports, (October 9). October 4, 12).

Why not hold a public competition, which the advisers and others could judge, for those sculp-tors who would be willing to donate their work to the British Library in appreciation of the honour of hav- shown that when the means of ing it exhibited in such a prestigious area? This would follow in the change are, theoretically in the tradition of the many benefactors of hands of the community, control the British Museum who have given over them is exercised - how else? their collections to enrich the nat-

This should add to the cultural interest of the British Library and symbolise its ongoing commitment to contemporary art.

Yours sincerely, YVONNE J. CRAIG, 27 Ridgmount Gardens, WCt. October 12.

Libel law shake-up From the Secretary of the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators Sir, I have read with great interest the report by Frances Gibb on reform of the libel laws (October 8). This institute is able and keen to provide the facility, proposed in the Neill working party's report, for arbitration of small libel cases under an arbitration scheme, which it suggests should be funded by the newspaper industry.

The principal features of such a scheme are speed, economy, simplified procedures (documents only and/or informal hearing) and finaltty. Unjustly tarnished reputations would thus be speedily restored. Yours faithfully, K. R. K. HARDING,

From Sergeant-Major Ian

Sir, Members of the Corps of Commissionaires, founded in 1859. are all ea-servicemen or ex-mem-bers of the police, fire brigade or prison services. They are easily recognisable by their distinctive white cap, black uniform and black leather cross-belt with badge.

This year the corps were invited by the Royal British Legion to take part, wearing uniform, in the Remembrance Day parade at the Cenotaph, Volunteers were vastly over-subscribed and those chosen to represent the corps had to be selected by ballot.

I and the 50 others selected have now been informed that, whilst the invitation still stands, the corps will not be allowed to march in uniform.
This decision was made and notified by the Royal British Legion, many of whose members are also em-ployed by the corps.

I wonder by what right, or for what reason the Royal British Legion prevents a body of ex-military servicemen from taking part in n military parade on public roads, wearing their uniforms, in remembrance of their own friends, families and colleagues who did not return from battle?

Yours faithfully, IAN CHAMPION (Senior supervisor. Corps of Commissionaires), 83 Fishponds Road, Tonting, SW17. October 14.

From Mr Tilak E. Gooneraine Sir, Do those Commonwealth leadremainder waterways would be in ers who urge, with some justificadanger, as there is only a require-ment in the 1968 Transport Act to maintain them to public health and forms of racial discrimination are extinguished in that country, but object to any tying of aid to the observance of human rights and third-party property there would be no reason to dredge them or keep the bridges at navigable height. From the Archdeacon of Cork. Cloyne and Ross

Sir, Mr Huber asks (October 14) to whom he should report the fact that four square feet of Grosvenor Square remain undug. May I suggest that he liaise immediately with Cavan County Council? Their roads have by far the most experienced holes in the world, and I am sure they would be only too happy to put him out of his misery.

Yours etc., MICHAEL H. G. MAYES, The Rectory, Glanmire, County Cork.

From Mr David H. Walton Sir, Surely the undug patch of Grosvenor Square (Mr G. Vernon Huber's letter) should be made a national park. I would suggest it be called the Vernon Huber Park in honour of its discoverer.

There is a precedent in Portland. Oregon, where a smalt unspoited, one square foot of the town centre has been officially designated Mill End Park, and they hald an annual celebration of it. There could then be a twinning of the two parks and delegates could be flown (at taxpayers' expense) from one to the other to celebrate these wonders.

Yours truly. DAVID H. WALTON, 10 St Guthlac's Close, Crowland, Lincolnshire.

From Mr W. H. Stokoe Sir, Mr Huber need not worry. It has all been carefully planned. The section of street left undug is the hit they will return to dig up once the whole street has been resurfaced. This is standard procedure.

Yours faithfully, BILL STOKOE, Chantry Down, Echo Pit Road Guildford, Surrey.

From Mr R. A. Campbell-Gibson Sir, After 200 days' trench-digging in the street around Mr Huber's home it would seem certain that beneath the small section of undisturbed street lies whatever it is the diegers were looking for. Yours faithfully, R. A. CAMPBELL-GIBSON.

TENNESSEE ERNIE FORD

Tennessee Ernie Ford, a country and gospel singer who became a star performer at the London Palladium in the 1950s, died in hospital at Reston, Virginia, on October 17 aged 72. Ford, who had been suffering from a liver disease, was born in Bristol, Tennessee, on February 13,

BEFORE there were the Beatles, and before the heavy metal hands laid their cacophonous stamp on the world of popular music, there was Tennessee Ernie Ford. It was a different world. When Ford sang in his rich baritone, mixing satiric with hillbilly humour, you could hear the words.

Tennessee Ernie's songs sprang from his hill-country roots. Though he was never a miner, his understanding of the conditions endured by the mining communities of Tennessee and West Virginia inspired his most successful recording: "Sixteen Tons".

"Sixteen Tons", which was written by Merle Travis in 1947, was an instant success on both sides of the Atlantie when Ford produced his version in 1955. It sold 2,000,000 copies in the first nine weeks making it the fastest-selling record of all time - and went on to sell, at the last count, more than 20,000,000. "It's an everlasting hit," Ford said in an interview last year. "It seems that young marrieds and even high school kids know it. It caught on to every working man in the world, I guess. In 1953 Ford became the first country and western entertainer ever to appear at the Palladium and he was, in his own words, "as nervous as a long-tailed cat in a roomful of rocking chairs". It was that kind of phrase that quickly woord the sceptical British audience. Over the next few years, until ballad singing fell out of fashion, he was invited

His first professional more than 80 record albums job, in 1939, was as a $10 per week disc jockey and announcer on his home town Helen O'Connell and Ella radio station. He took it in order to finance a brief period of study at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, but soon abandoned the course and went back to work as a disc jockey at stations in Atlanta, Georgia, and Knoxville. During the second world war Ford enlisted in the US Army Air Corps, rising to the high school years, during rank of lieutenant and serving as a bomber navigator and later instructor. By 1953, in addition to his Palladium success, he had his own network radio show and was beginning to appear on television. Until 1956, however, his television performances were limited to offpeak daytime shows. Then,

Ford signed. Though The Ford Show (named for its sponsor, the Ford Motor Company, and not its star) at first received mixed reviews and low ratings, it won the Motion Picture Daily award for the best television programme of 1956-57.

It was a vindication for Ford, who had resisted attempts to change his style. "I'm doing what's right for me," he told the producer, "and if that won't go, maybe I don't belong on evening TV. In the event, it went so well that he received an "Emmy nomination for the season's best performer.

After his variety show ended in the early 1960s Ford. appeared occasionally on television specials and toured the country as a country-music performer. In 1974 his was the first popular music group to tour the Soviet Union under a US-Soviet cultural exchange agreement.

OCTOBER 19 ON THIS DAY

One record of this extraordinary disaster states that between 8,000 and 9,000 barrels of porter were lost.

> DREADFUL ACCIDENT

The neighbourhood of St Giles's was thrown into the utmost consternation on Monday night, by one of the most melancholy accidents we ever remember. About six o'clock, one of the vats in the extensive premises of Messrs Henry Meux and Co, in Banburystreet, St Giles's, burst, and in a moment New-street, George-street, and several others in the vicinity were dehiged with the contents, amounting to 3,500 barrels of strong beer. The fluid, in its course, swept every thing before it.

Two houses in New-street, adjoining the brewhouse, were totally demolished. The inhabitants, who were of the poorer class, were all at home. In the first floor one of them, a mother and daughter were at tea: the mother was killed on the spot; the daughter was swept away by the current through s partition, and dashed to pieces. The back parts of the houses of Mr Goodwin, poulterer. of Mr Hawse, Tavistock Arms, and Nos 24 and 25 in Great Russellstreet, were nearly destroyed. The female servant of the Taviatock Arms was suffocated. Three of Mr Meux's men employed in the brewery were rescued with great difficulty, by the people collected to afford relief, who had to wade up to their middle through the beer.

The site of the place is low and flat, and there being no declivity to carry off the fluid in its fall, it spread and sunk into the neighbouring cellars, all of which were inhabited. The bursting of the brew-house walls, and the fall of heavy timber, materially contributed to aggravate the mischief, by forcing the roofs and walls of the adjoining houses. The crowd collected from the time of the accident to o late hour was immense It presented many distressing scenes of children and others inquiring for and lamenting their parents, relstives, and friends.

A great number of workmen were employed the whole of yesterday in clearing away the rubbish, and the following dead bodies have been found:-Ann Saville, about 35 years of age Eleanor Cooper, between 15 and 16 years of age, servant to Mr Hawse, the Tavistock Arms. Hannah Banstield, s child, four years and o half old. Mrs Butler, a poor Irish woman, her daughter, and grand daughter, and three others, whose names have not been ascertained. One person has been dug out alive. Two other persons are missing from the neighbourhood, whose bodies have not yet been found. Many of the cellars on the south side of Russellstreet are completely inundated with beer, and in some houses the inhabitants had to save themselves from drowning by mounting their highest pieces of furniture. One of the interesting circum stances attending the melancholy event was observable in the anxiety expressed by several Gentlemen who were drawn to the spot to prevent any noise among the crowd, that the persons who were employed in clearing away the rubbish might, in pursuing their work, direct their ears to the ground, in order to discover whether any of their victims were calling for assistance. The caution and humanity with which the labourers proceeded in their distressing task excited a strong interest, and

 CHOICE: This is the first British production of a black farce from the Argentinian dramatist, Roberto Cossa, about a family struggling to survive in the face of roaring inflation and a dreadful old granny who consumes most of their food. The bloated crone is played by Les Dawson, The comedian's rare venture into acting does not require him to learn many words, more to display a repertoire of grunta and pulled faces as "she" shamefully manipulates the rest of the family and resists their several attempts to get "her" out of the way. Dawson is surrounded by a cast of seasoned comedy actors, notably the wonderful Liz Smith as his daughter, Jim Broadbent and Timothy Spall. The adoption of Lancashire accents by supposed critzens of Buenos Aires matters less than the play's leisurely pace. The essence of successful farce is speed. Nona has all the right ingredients but stays too much in first geer. (Ceefax) (s)

The avenger: Clint Eastwood, fast gun and no name (9.05pm)

9.05 Film: Pale Rider (1985).

 CHOICE: By the mid-1980s the Hollywood western was in such a wretched state that Clint Eastwood's Pale Rider was welcomed with relief as a return to a once great tradition. Other critics were with read as a return to a crice great dracinon. Other critics were more sniffly. They detected similarities with Shane and echoes of Eastwood's own High Plains Drifter. The film was unfavourably compared with an Eastwood masterplece, The Cutlaw Josey Wales. On the plot level, certainly, High Plains Drifter offers familiar material. A gold-mining community is being bullied by a vicious entrepreneur, it prays for deliverance. The call is answered. Behold, a pale horse and sitting astride it is Clint Eastwood, as the mysterious stranger with a fast gun and no name, But if Pale Rider offers a predictable story, it is lifted by the presence of Eastwood as actor and the imagination of Eastwood as director, helped by lyrical location photography from Bruce Surtees

Mondo Cinema: Red Sorghum (1987)

CHOICE: A season of recent world cinema opens with a masterly film by the Chinese director, Zhang Yimou, which won the Golden Beer award at the Berlin film festival in 1988. Red Sorghum was made quickly on a modest budget but far from suffering from this shows an accomplished film-maker in total command of his material. The film is set in a small rural community on China in the 1920s and follows the fortunes of an 18-year-old girl, who marries a much older man and is widowed when he is mysteriously murdered. She takes a new husband but her happiness is cut short by the invasion of the Japanese who force the local population to flatten the sorghum fields for a new road and start a campaign of atrocities. The portrait of a tranquil world suddenly gripped by terror is realised in a series of startling images, w Zhang, a former cameramen, showing his flair for colour and composition .

9.20 Screen One: A Question of Attribution (1991). CHOICE: Alan Bennett's An Englishman Abroad, recounting an unlikely meeting in Moscow between the spy Guy Burgess and the actress Coral Browne, is one of the most fandly remembered television dramas. With A Question of Attribution, created by the same team of Bennett, producer innes Lloyd and director John Schlesinger, it has a worthy companion piece. Again the central figure is a spy. The then Sr Anthony Blurt is being investigated by Mi5. They have discovered he is a Soviet agent but want to know more. At the same time Blurt is investigating a take Titlan. Bennett makes a witty and pleusible link between the two and throws in a memorable encounter, in the gellery of Buckingham Palace, between Blunt and his employer, She is the Queen, played, as a pretty sharp cookie, by Prunella Scales. ● CHOICE: Tonight's film brings Dr Jonathan Miller's five-part CHOICE: Tonight's film brings Dr Jonathan Miller's five-part discourse past the half-way stage. He deserves praise for taking on a difficult theme and helping to make it intelligible to the lay audience. He cannot, of course, disgulse the fact that machess is a sombre and unsettling subject and by their nature the programmes are not easy viewing. The overwhelming impression is that after centuries of trying, we are not a lot nearer understanding what madness is and how it can be dealt with. Tonight's film focuses on treatments to the brain. In the 19th century nationals were stranged to cheirs and out on treatments. century patients were strapped to chairs and put on treadmills in the hope that this would bludgeon their brains back into working order. As Miller says, it was like benging a television set to restore the picture. In this century asseults on the brain have become more direct, with insulin and metrazol imjections, psychosurgery and electro convidence thereon. (Conference)

Regal renewal: Father Desmond Tillier admires the workmanship, above, in the Queen's parish church, St Peter's, Eaton Square, which has been restored from the devastation, below, of an arson attack in October 1987. The church reopens for worship tomorrow (Ruth Gledhill, Religious Affairs Correspondent, writes). The church clock, which stopped at 9am on October 20, four years ago, will be restarted at the same time tomoxrow. Six worshippers met inspectors had discovered a Wellcome drum containing piperonyl butoxide, used in fly spray, at an Iraqi military site. "We never supplied the drum to Iraq," he said. "We have checked our records as far back as they go, to 1982. It must have been supplied by a third party. As far as we are aware, the insecticide has no weapons application."

Davy Morris appears in the section on Scud missiles. Staff from the company travelled frequently to Iraq and the managing director, Peter Har-risson, confirmed that the firm had supplied equipment to Iraq. "We supplied stan-dard industrial cranes and kits for local assembly. Often, we had oo idea where our cusromers installed them."

The other firms oo the list are Matrix Churchill, a Cov-cotry-based machine-tool manufacturer, Sheffield Forgemasters, Walter Somers Ltd, of Birmingham, Destec Engineering, of Lincoln, and Amersham International, listed as having supplied diluted plutonium for the Tuwaiths reseach facility: The UN inspectors listed another British chemical firm, but the trade department has asked for more information as it cannot find it, plus a small tool-making firm.

The inclusion of Walter Somers, Sheffield Forgemasters and Destec Engineering was expected. All three were involved unwittingly in the manufacture of Irao's super-gun. Walter Somers faced prosecution over its role io the manufacture of gun barrels but the charge was later dropped by Customs, which accepted that the firm had no knowledge of how the barrels were goiog to be used.

n the topsy-turvy world of television, victory masquerades as disaster and failure as success. The latest TV franchise round is depicted as soap opera, but the true comparison, surely, is a Restoration comedy of identity, where the libertine is revealed as pure as driven snow and the ne'er-do-well unmasked as the rich and generous uncle.

How else to explain the sudden lurch southward of shares in Yorkshire TV and HTV on their retention of their banknote-printing presses for another ten years? Meanwhile, defeated Thames TV was on every broker's buy list, while TV-am shares were defying gravity even as the tears dripped into Camden Lock.

This last gives rise to a mind-boggling thought. Bruce Gyngell and his team will now be allowed to run the franchise for another 14 months while pulling as much cash as possible out of the business. Picture, if you can, an even more cheaply run TV-am. Roland Rat, this could be your finest hour.

Market-watchers were given a fore -taste of what might happen once a few of the franchise holders start to run out of money, say about two weeks into the new franchise period, when the stock ex-change's TOPIC company announce-ment screens went blank on Tuesday. But the real opportunities for soap opera were elsewhere. The Channel tunnel, previously seen as a long-running Anglo-French co-production, abruptly flipped into courtroom drama as Sir Alastair Morton, Eurotunnel chief executive, went to the High Court for an injunction to persuade the builders to keep building. Viewers are advised not to try this one at home when the plumber cuts up rough.

Across the Atlantic, the makers of Hill

Street Blues and St Elsewhere might look to Wall Street for their oext creation. After the woes of Salomon Brothers, hlamed by an in-depth report drawn up by the bank itself on anyone who might have left recently, came news of $885 million losses and a dropped dividend from Citicorp, which is presumably bad news for former employees of Vickers da Costa and Scrimgeours in London. BUSINESS PROFILE: Peter Rawlins

Ruthless enemy of the status quo

The chief executive of the London Stock Exchange is seen by some as an upstart, as Carol Leonard discovers thought about Peter Rawlins, chief executive of the London Stock Exchange. Both are deeply entrenched and wbolly incompatible.

One is held largely by the old guard of the Square Mile, those he has recently displaced as mem-bers of the Stock Exchange council, and those who continually harp back to the days before Big Bang when there was a trading floor and the exchange was perhaps the most exclusive gentleman's club in Britain. They see him as a young upstart — he has just turned 40 — and question his actions and motives. They allude to the fact that he has oo previous experience of the stock market. He is an accountant, was a partner of Arthur Andersen, the . management consultancy, helped Ian Hay Davison sort out the Lloyd's insurance market and ing agency at Lloyd's. Mention his name and they will laugh, a ridiculing, almost specring laugh. "You mean wee Pete bawin' Rawlins," reply men 15 years his senior. "Who the hell does he think he is?" they add. Eventually, they will admit that he has done a good job and that he was the right man to do it, but they question his manner, express concern for the future and complain that he "talks down" to them. Even within the exchange tower, where he is marginally more popular - he has, after all, reduced staff numbers by a third, to 2,000 he is referred to as "our small leader". He is 5ft 10ins tall, but somehow he seems much smaller. He has an impish face, a slightly bulbous nose, a high forehead and thinning hair, but although not handsome, he is not unattractive.

The other school of thought, held largely by those on the periphery of the City establishment, accredits Rawlins with near-hero status. He has done precisely what needed to be done, they argue. The old Stock Exchange council was, they recall, jokingly described as living proof that there was life after death. They will tell you that Rawlins is ex-tremely intelligent, refreshingly energetic and good company.

Rawlins is aware of these divided opinions. "Lots of people who don't know me see me as some arrogant, opportunist, career-driven individual, who has political am-bitions, with a capital P," he says. "It staggers me, because oothing could be further from the truth." He admits, however, that he does sometimes talk down to people. He also admits that even his mother is in awe of him, not because he rams and raves - he is

The told that I intimidate all my family and that I intimidate people here [at the Stock Exchange]. I think it's perhaps because I have a quicker brain and tongue than most people and I don't waste my time with people or things that bore me. It's not that I would be snotty towards them, I would just ignore them." He agrees that he might well be rude in the process and that he is impatient to a fault. His wife and friends agree that he is anything but modest. That impatience means that Rawlins habitually cuts conversations short. He will look straight through you as yon speak, visual-ising in his head what you are going to say next, deducing the going to say next, demicing the point you are trying, so laboriously (in his eyes) to make, and then be will cut you off. "It's not that I finish sentences for people," he says, "but before people have finished speaking I say Fine, I understand what you are trying to then became managing director of Sturge, the biggest uoderwritsay.' I listen quicker than other terribly frustrating." He drums a lighter on a packet of cigarettes. He is in perpetual motion.

Rawtins is also aware that because of his bluff, sometimes brash manner, people in the City often conclude that he must be thick skinned. "I have a strong and very private life and, given that, sufficient personal resilience, that I do have a fairly thick skin," he says. At the Stock Exchange council meeting when he pushed through his radical decision to change it into a newstyle board, he informed the then council members that they were like "a load of dinosaurs". He knows that he has made enemies.

Rawlins insists, however, that despite his urgent desire to change the status quo and to "get things done", he does not deliberately set ont to ruffle feathers. "I sometimes take deliberately iconoclastic positions to keep people guessing and thinking. The day they can predict given to irritation rather than tem- where I'm coming from is the day I per - but because he has such a cease to be an effective change agent. But I hope I'm not in any way churlish." Does he care if people like him or not? "Of course I do, and I do genuinely hope I'm not leaving a sea of malevolent discontents out there."

He is irritated by pomposity, in-efficiency, an inability to keep pace with him, and "the too easy acceptance, particularly in this country, of settling for second best". Rawlins regrets that be cannot play the piano when, in fact, he can play. What he means is that he is not a concert pianist. Everything he does he wants to do better than anybody else - or else he does not want to do it at all.

That need to prove himself stems from his childhood. The eldest of four children, born and brought up in London, Rawlins had high expectations imposed on bim by his father, advertising director of a magazine group. Stepben Mischler, a merchant banker with Citicorp and a lifelong friend, recalls how his ow people sometimes talk. It must be parents used to complain that it was unfair "of Pete's father to push him so much. He had to behave like someone much older than he was, be had to live up to his father's expectations." I tell him that Rawlins claims never to have been intimidated. "Except by his father," Mischler adds. Rawlins' father died when Rawlins was at St Edward's boarding school, Oxford Rawlins was 14. That was, he says, one of only two nights in his life when he was unable to sleep. It left what be describes as a "hole" in his life. "I cannot remember anything, except mundane events, between the ages of 14 and 17. It must have been the effect of my father's death. It bothers me a lot." Rawlins explains that his fatherin-law, Teddy Langton, once the senior partner of Stoy Hayward, became a surrogate father. Rawlins has known Langton's daughter, Louise, since he was 15. He calls him "dad" and, according to Mischler, has been determined since to prove that Louise married well, since Rawlios is a gentile and the Langtons are Jews.

Success has changed Rawlins. He has become more self assured. He lives with his wife and two children in Wimbledon, south west London, has a holiday home in Burgundy and earned £250,000 last year. He stresses that that includes pensions contributions and bonus - Rawlins wants to retire before he is 50 and has planned accordingly. He would rather be at his house io France, writing plays. "I work to live, rather than the other way round." he says. He first wrote for the theatre when he was an undergraduate at Keble College. Oxford. His mother, now aged 63, was a professional actress and his maternai grandmother was an opera singer. Rawlins is a natural and hates being anything other than the centre of attention. Success has oot, however, jurned him into an establishment figure.

The popular image begins to change. Rawlins, although he claims to be "ruthlessly logical" and "cerebral but not an abstract intellectual", is emotional - he is moved by music and opera - sentimental and tactile. He will swear, sometimes to shock. "to make people listen", but in a "rather naff' schoolboy way". In that same naff schoolboy way, he still uses words such as "brill" and "super". He es animatedly that he is a "child of the Sixties". He has, he says, an exceptionally high energy level, but only because he forcibly speeds up his metabolism by smoking and drioking coffee. "I'm naturally very lazy and I'm renowned for cat-napping - having a quick zizz - at my own dinner par-ties, just for two or three minutes." Rawlins has no idea what he will do next. He is not cut out to be a figurehead — "I would offend too many people."

"I have lived on my wits for most of my life," concludes Rawlins. "I'm very conscious of that fact. One day, the adrenalin will stop flowing and the luck will run out and I hope I will then say to myself that it is time to ship out."

Driven to distraction in Bangkok

By Anatole Kaletsky ECONOMICS EDITOR

FORGET Soviet disunity, Third World debt and double-dip recessions. One subject monopolised the corridor chatter at this week's International Monetary Fund

World Bank annual meeting That subject was Bangkok. Not Bangkok as in bizarre sex shows, psychedelically painted temples and cheap overnight tailors; but Bangkok, as in hell. Bangkok has delights and hazards. The temples, the beautiful women and the delicious food are more than fairly matched against the rabid dogs, the burnid weather and the obsessions with sex and Aids (on Saturday, the British ambassador dined with the wife of the Governor of the Bank of England at the restaurant Cabbages and Condoms).

But all of these features are overwhelmed by Bangkok's defining characteristic - the moo-strous, deafening, suffocating and motionless sea of cars. Los Angeles, Londoo and Mexico City all have traffic jams. But Bangkok is a traffic jam. And nothing could have better brought out the city's essence than an annual meeting of the IMF.

These jamborees are carefully arranged to isolate participants from the bost city's real life. The delegates' main objective is to hour. So the success of an IMF meeting can be measured as well by the speed with which bluesuited bodies are moved between maximise the number of opulent receptions attended per waking number of speeches denouncing inflation and government debts. But in Bangkok, the shuttling broke down. Despite the threeday public boliday declared for the conference, a two-mile journey between hotels could take an hour. So why did the bankers oot abandon their limousines and try walking? First, there is no reliable public transport, secondly, the traffic lights are manually operated, and thirdly, amid choking car fumes, walking is intolerable.

Bankers point to countries like Thailand as models for the future of the world. But if Bangkok's private affluence and public squalor are what lie in store for the world, one delegate returns with the conclusion: "I have seen the future and it doesn't work."

THE London Stock Exchange is to move from its 24-storey tower io Throgmorton Street, one of the most valuable sites in the City of London. Peter Rawlins, chief exec-utive of the exchange, says that a move from the coffinshaped, concrete tower is part of his three-year plan for the venerable institution.

"I would be very surprised if we were still in this building in three years' time," he said.
"This huilding is a child of its time, a real child of the Sixties, and it is wholly unsuited to the use to which it is presently put. It was designed to house back-offices for member firms."

He wants all the exchaoge's London-based employees -most of the 2,000 staff, now accommodated in nine buildings in the capital, to be housed under one roof.

Mr Rawlins said: "For all the massive technology we have, this is a people husiness. I can't get my arms around this, I can't infect it with my hope, enthusiasm, perhaps a hit of drive and direction, perhaps a hir of courage, from vory towers. The idea that I'm sitting at the top of the ivory tower with the world down there is terrible. I cannot get out and walk the floors and let people see that this chap does not have two heads and green tails." He would like the exchange to be situated "right in the thick of it", while realising, given the diverse geographical location of London's financial institutions, that the task will be hard. Mr Rawlios is believed to have a location in mind hut is reluctant to disclose his intentions, "If I answered that I would be giving away all sorts of commercial secrets. There's a rather difficult property market out there, so I don't want to signal too early what I am going to do."

Property market analysts say the exchange's 260,000 sq ft tower could be worth about £120 million. The exchange also owns the freehold of two other properties in central London. Any profit would be reinvested "to enhance our services or to reduce charges", said a spokeswoman.

Burmah falls 28p on SHV stake sale

By MARTIN BARROW SHARES in Burmah Castrol, the lubricants and specialist chemicals group, slipped from 596p to 568p after SHV took advantage of higher share prices in the oil and gas sector to place its 9.1 per cent stake in the company.

James Alexander, a director of Burmah, said that although relations between the two companies had always been friendly, the stake had been a source of instability. It represented SHV's entire holding.

SHV began building up its shareholding in Burmah after the two companies' joint bid for Calor, the bottled gas group, in 1987. The £820 mil-lion bid was allowed to lapse after the Calor board refused to endorse the terms but SHV, with 29.9 per cent of Calor, continued to add to its stake and now owns 44 per cent.

SHV's strategy appeared to be to link up Burmah and Calor and retain a substantial minority shareholding. How-ever, Burmah rejected SHV's.

Calor shares rose from 240p to 248p as energy analysts anticipated renewed share purchases by SHV, which has stated its intention to own 51 per cent of the company

aution escorts rise in confidence

By PHILIP BASSETT INDUSTRIAL EDITOR

RUSINESS confidence among banks, building societies and other financial services companies is growing for the first time for almost two years, the Confederation of British Industry says.

The findings of the latest CBI survey into the financial services sector showed that for the first time since this quarterly series of surveys began, companies were on balance more optimistic about the overall position of business. However, their husiness volumes are still poor. more people are likely to lose their jobs. and the majority of companies still see no improvement in overall husiness

But ministers who are looking for any signs of improvement in confidence in support of their claims of a recovery in the second half of the year will take the

that their views are correct. The survey, carried out hy the confederation and Coopers & Lybrand Deloitte, the accountant, shows a marked improvement in overall business confidence. The balance of companies - those seeing an improvement against those seeing a decline - rose from minus 13 per cent in June to plus 22 per cent now.

However, 64 per cent of those surveyed are still no more confident than they were, and confederation economists cautioned that even those registering increased confidence were dependent on the expected improvement in business actually being realised in the months ahead.

Of all companies surveyed, 61 per cent said their current level of business was still below normal. Business volumes are still declining, too, although less sharply than they have in the past survey's findings as further evidence year. A balance of 13 per cent believe that business volumes will improve over the next three months. Financial services companies have seen their business with financial institutions and private individuals grow over the past three months. However, trade with industrial and commercial companies has continually fallen over the period and is set to decline further, albeit less

Sudhir Junankar, deputy economics director of the confederation, said the results suggested that financial services companies had reached the bottom of the recession. However, the confederation gave a warning that the increase in confidence was based on an expected upturn in consumer activity.

Charges and prices continued to increase, but the sharp cuts in staff carried out by the banks, building societies and finance houses are expected to continue at the same rate.

THE market is looking for another big bid battle to revive its flagging fortunes. The spotlight fell yesterday oo another perennial takeover favourite, Sears, the Freemans mail order and Selfridges and Saxone stores group.
After a long spell in the doldrums, Sears ended the session 6p higher at 103p as more than 15 million share changed hands.

Kingfisher, 2p cheaper at 547p, was once again tipped as a suitor. Dealers claim that the group needs to make some kind of acquisition to boost its earnings despite the departure of Archie Norman, the finance director, to Asda this week. But the name of Land Securities, the property developer, 6p lower at 508p, has also been linked to Sears. Sears has a large property portfolio that includes a oumber of valuable sites in Londoo's West End.

The rest of the equity market ended the day on a firm note, cheered by bid speculation and an opening advance on Wall Street. Turnover touched 551 million shares as the FT-SE 100 index ended on a high note, breaching the 2,600 level again, with a rise of 12.4 points to 2,601.1. Government securities barely stirred oo overnight levels.

ext week brokers will be told that they are virtually banned from selling schemes which buy investment bonds with money borrowed on the value of the diam's have the value of the client's home. And not a moment too soon.

The Financial Intermediaries Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association is sending guid-ance notes on equity home income schemes to its members for the first time, four years after the stock market crash and years after concern about the schemes was first raised.

This comes after a campaign by Age Concern, the charity, to help many elderly people who face losing their homes because of such schemes, many of which were taken out when investment bonds and house prices seemed capable only of rising. The homeowners now know to their tragic cost how much difference falling bond returns and rising interest rates can make. When the schemes were sold these risks often were not pointed out.

Under the new regime this should never happen. In the very rare circumstances that such schemes can be sold the investor will have to sign a copy of a risk warning and will be given a copy of it. Before doing so they should also be shown what effect different interest rates and growth rates would have on the home income scheme. The risk warning issued on the broker's headed paper points out that many investors in the past have seen their capital invested in an insurance bond diminish over the years and in some cases be wiped out altogether so that the payments on the loan could no longer be met by the bond. It also makes sure that investors know that house prices may not keep pace with an increasing loan and that there is a real danger that they will be asked to make payments themselves in the future. The illustrations to

The loan interest rate used in calculations can either be Self-defence an average of the past five years or the current rate of interest, whichever is higher.

investors who want to know exactly how much a salesman earns in commission for selling an insurance policy or investment before they agree to buy a policy should send in their comments on the Securities and Investments Board's proposals on disclosure.

The Consumers' Association and the Office of Fair Trading should be fighting the consumer's corner. SIB is likely to be bombarded with submissions from interested groups, such as brokers and life companies spelling out the advantages of telling investors about costs rather than commission.

But investors need to fight for themselves. The restricted amount of disclosure allowed at the moment means that salesmen can get away with selling an insurance bond (paying 5.5 per cent commission) when a unit trust would be more suitable (hut would earn the salesman just 3 per cent commission). Investors have no means of comparing commission paid on different policies and must put pressure on SIB to find a way of doing this. Insurance companies have so far managed to persuade the regulators that it is too complicated to work out at the point of sale. Yet salesmen secm pretty adept at working out how much they have made from a

The opinions of investors do matter. The banks were astonished when so many of their customers responded to their draft code of practice, most of them unfavourably. The result was a drastic rewriting of the code: a victory for the customers.

Investors should tell S1B that expressing the costs of a policy as a reduction in the policy proceeds is unnecessarily complicated for people to understand, and relies on projections that may not be fulfilled while the costs will always be incurred.

The legislation is supposed to protect investors. They will have to make sure it does.

The deadline for comments is December 20. People should take advantage of the opportunity to make their views known.

HOUSE prices have increased on average by 40.7 per cent since the crash, according to the Halifax huilding society. The rewards of investing in little-known companies are potentially high. But how can you hope 10 offset the associated risks?

The answer is through an Investment Trust, which spreads your risk across as many as 200 companies. To buy such a portfolio yourself would be prohibitively expensive.

But it doesn't cost a fortune to invest in the future of smaller companies through an Investment Trust.

The benefits of low costs and spreading your risk apply to all the different types of investment Trust whether it's one holding a broad base of blue-chip shares, or those specialising in a particular geographical area or a specific industry sector.

Every Investment Trust is a public company quoted on the Stock Exchange. And, since most of them are listed on the share pages, you will be able to watch the progress of your investment.

INVESTORS will get no more information on the commission paid to financial advisers under proposed regulations published this week, but they will learn more about the effects of the costs of the investment group on their estimated final pay out.

The Securities and Investments Board and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation pub-lished disclosure proposals following a request last December from Peter Lilley, trade secretary, 10 review the amount of information given to investors before they sign an application form.

Mr Lilley and Sir Gordon Borrie, director general of fair trading, had called for disclosure of commission at the point of sale. This, they argued, was necessary for investors to assess the advice they were being given. There are substantial differences in the levels of commissions paid on different products and by different investment groups. These differences might sway some brokers in the advice they give.

Currently, investors are not told how much commission a broker will earn for suggesting an investment with a particular company until they have

With unit trusts, investment trusts and guaranteed income bonds this can be done immediately, he says, Some insurance policies are more complicated in the way they pay commission. In most cases the commission is higher than for the comparable noninsurance investment. For example, a unit trust pays 3 per cent to the broker and an investment bond about 5.5 per cent. The company's costs and expenses on the two investments may be similar. In most cases the bond is the worse deal for investors but better for the salesman. This will not be revealed under the proposed changes. Investors will be given a summary of the key features of the product recommended. This will show how much the investor will get back if he or she cashes in a policy early. It will also include figures expressed as a reduction in policy proceeds - showing the ng-term impact of costs.

SIB, chaired by Sir David Walker, believes that this will be sufficient for investors to decide whether they are being advised correctly. The overall effect of life office costs is the same for tied agents or independent intermediaries, il

Jean Eaglesham, head of money policy at the Con-Association said: Without commissions disclosure at the point of sale, buying financial advice on products like life insurance is like shopping at a supermarket where there are no prices displayed, merely a promise to provide them on the other side of the checkout."

SMALLER COMPANIES -A BIG OPPORTUNITY

Insurance company to repay Centrust victims 'with reasonable link'

GRE raises compensation hopes

GUARDIAN Royal Exchange is set to make new offers of compensation to investors who lost money through Jake Reynolds, a GRE tied agent.

The insurance company says it expects to offer full repayments of premiums plus interest, totalling about £200,000, to a possible 200 regularpremium policyholders.

Repayments will not be automatic. Policyholders will have to establish a "reasonable link" with GRE, Explaining. Tim Lloyd Williams, general manager financial services, says: "Where there is a link between the loss and GRE arising because Reynolds was agent, there is oo quibble. We have to take that "We are certainly oot looking for a policy. A properly completed application form would be regarded as a clear link with GRE and monies iovested."

The oews will provide little relief to the 230 investors who have lost an estimated £8 million through Mr Reyoolds's Norfolk financial advisory firm, Centrust. The firm ceased trading in February after the Bank of England took out an emergency injunction freezing Mr Reynolds's assets. aod began investigation whether he had been taking illegal deposits.

What kind of people buy Investment Trusts?

All sorts of people buy investment trusts for all sorts of purposes. After all, the harder you work for your money, the harder you expect it to work for you when you decide to invest it.

The Murray Investment Trust Savings Scheme takes the mystique out of stockmarket investment by allowing you to invest regularly from £30 a month, or lump sums from £250. You would be surprised how quickly such sums can accumulate into a tidy amount, and your money is readily available, should emergencies arise.

We would be pleased to tell you more. To receive further information, just complete the coupon below.

You should be aware that the price of shares and the income from them may go down as well as up, and past performance is not necessarily a guide to the future. Investors may not get back the amount they invested.

Boston bank on visitors' support

By WALTER GAMMIE

BOSTON UNITED expect their home matches against Yeovil, largest crowd of the season at their York Street ground for today's GM Vauxhall Cooference match against Wycombe Wanderers, whose travelling support continues to swell after a five-match run of away vic-

York Street, with a capacity of 10,000, is superbly appointed with three recently-built stands and this seasoo Dave Cusack, the player-manager, has spent £38,000 to try to bring the team to a matching standard. The midfield player, Paul Richardson, signed for £20,000 from Barnet, is, however, doubtful after injuring a knee in the 1-0 win at Macclesfield last week. Chris Swales, an £8,000 signing from Peterborough United, is fit to resume his place in the centre of defence.

Although 12 points behind

Wycombe, Bostoo bave two matches in hand over today's visitors and have played three less than Farnborough Town, the leaders.

Farnborough, who travel to Macclesfield today, proved they were not one-week wonders by beauing Altrincham 3-0 at Cherrywood Road last Saturday. "We've got to keep the run going," Ted Pearce, the manager, said. "Next Saturday we play at Salisbury in the FA. Cup, and if we get to the first round we also have a ruo of Colchester, Barrow and Kettering in November that can get a surge of interest going. We cannot afford to switch off." A reminder of the value of success in an FA Cup run can be found in the continuing advance of Woking who moved seven points clear in the Diadora 5-0 on Tuesday. Cash from last season's exploits has gone toproved floodlights, a public address system, seating, a fulltime commercial manager, Peter Braund, and £15,000 for the forward, Steve Milton, signed from Fulham. Miltoo cracked three goals in the win over Basingstoke, with the other two coming from George Friel, aged 21, who has scored 15 goals this season.

The 3-0 win by Bucton over Leek on Tuesday was their ninth in succession and closed the gap on Goole Town, the leaders, to three points in the HFS Loans League. Buxtoo have four matches in hand. Goole lost 1-0 at home to Hyde, ending an eight-match winning run that had been founded oo goals by Dale Banton, the former Aldershot and York City player, Both teams are in action in the FA Trophy second qualifying round tomorrow, Buxton at home to Moor Green and Goole at home to Marine

Charterhouse leave it late against Eton By GEORGE CHESTERTON

CHARTERHOUSE started well io their 1-1 draw with Etoo, yet Eton scored first, thanks to Walsh, But Charterbouse had the better of the second period and Ashby equalised 15 minutes from time.
Shrewsbury missed several early chances in their 2-2 draw at Brentwood, before Cooke put them ahead with a 25-yard drive. Five minutes into the second half, Macmillan Brentwood controlled play from then on but Shrewsbury again took the lead when Cooke tapped in from a corner. Five mioutes from time, Keane ran in from the left to level. Io a well-contested match at Bradfield, Repton went ioto the lead after five minutes through Cooper. Deaoer equalised with a header before half-time but Davison, with a volley, put Reptoo back in froot and Biggin made the score 3-1.

Kimbolton returned to winning form with a 2-1 success at Chigwell Dean went through on his own after 20 minutes to score for Kimbolton. He headed home a second from a far-post cross but Chigwell fought hard and pulled a goal back.

Forest dominated their con-test with Highgate, winning 5-0. Prat. Smith and Fortune, with two, scored for Forest but an own goal midway through the first half seemed to undermine Highgate's confidence. Winchester won 3-2 when they visited Bedales. Their goals came from Gee and Minford, the latter scoring twice.

Kelly College leave their rivals trailing

By MICHAEL STEVENSON KELLY College have raced away this winter, winning all of the eight games they have played, with a poiots tally of 307 scored to 41 conceded. Their most recent win was against Exeter College, a large sixth-form college serving all of Exeter, who they beat 22-9.

The win is remarkable considering that Kelly, the alma mater of Adedayo Adebayo, of Bath, has only 250 boys, aged between 11 and 18. Both Jonas Hurst, the stand-off half, and Barnaby Durrant, their No. 8, scored two tries against Exeter. Kelly also registered wins against Exeter School (34-6), Queen's, Taumton (49-10), Truro (33-4) and West Buckland (47-3). Clifton have also started splendidly, winning their first five matches. They put 44 five matches. They put 44 points past their old boys, Taunton School restricted them to a 6-4 victory, but a superb display by the pack earned them a 19-0 victory against Blundell's in atrocious conditions. Down-side were defeated 32-3, as were Cheltenham, 22-13.

Cheltenham. 22-13.

Another team prospering is QEGS Penrith. Their victory in the first round of the Dally Mail Cup was their fifth successive win. RGS High Wycombe have slipped up just once, losing 23-6 to John Fisher, but have won their other sight matches. their other eight matches, scor-ing 189 points to 55. The 103rd meeting of Monmouth and Christ College, Brecon, saw a convincing victory for Monmouth. They led 21-3 at the ioterval, and woo 37-18.

In The Groove to maintain fillies' grip on Champion

TWELVE months ago, a run in the Prix de l'Arc de Triomphe did not prevent In The Groove from winning the Dubai Champion Stakes 13 days later. It may not do so reacts during the preliminaries again at Newmarket today. If she does succeed, David

Elsworth's tough four-year-old will not only emulate Triptych, the last filly to win it twice, but become the thirteenth member of her sex to win the race in the last 20

In The Groove enters the fray today having run much better at Longchamp this year than she did last. On that occasion she finished ninth; this time she was sixth.

With the notable exception of Suave Dancer, she was going as well as any at today's shorter distance and she can win again now that the reverts to 10 furlongs.

Ristna, the other filly in the field, was an impressive win-ner of the Sun Chariot Stakes over today's course and distance a fortnight ago after being beaten easily by Desert Sun at Doncaster before that. Explaining the difference yesterday, John Gosden told me that, as a result of too hard a race first time out, Ristna had become a worrier.

At Doncaster she fretted and sweated away her race. On her home course, though, she was calm and cool beforehand and that enabled her to reveal her true potential. So Gosden's advice is to see how she

Those who can recall Lester winning this stamina test on Major Rose (1968), John Cherry (1976) and Popsi's Joy (1980) will know that Martin clearly capable of playing a Pipe has entrusted the task of prominent role. His com- landing a sustained ante-post landing a sustained ante-post gamble to a safe pair of bands. Tamarpour has been rested > with today's race in mind since winning the North-umberland Plate at Newcastle at the end of June. By all accounts, that preparation has itively emiding confidence. Star Player, who won the Chester Cup and started favourite for the Plate, is another who has been trained especially with today in mind. He won his preparatory race at Kempton, even though the distance was besically short of his ideal, and I expect him to prove the principal danger to my nap.

Brittain's choice Clive Brittain's plans for today's Dubai Champion Stakes depend on the weather. Sikeston will represent the stable in the event of heavy overnight rain; if not, Terimon will be the Brittain runner. Only one of the pair will run and Michael Roberts will ride.

Samoans relish their role as rugby's warriors

The winds which buffeted the oorth for most of the week may prove an unwelcome omen for the Scots this afternoon at Murrayfield. As the Welsh, Australiaos and Argentinians will testify, the Western Samoans do oot need the fourth anniversary of the October hurricane as an excuse to uproot trees.

A glimpse of the Samoan team room might not lift the locals' morale either. So many messages have spluttered through the fax machine at the team's hotel, the walls are papered with goodwill. Many of them reflect the religious conviction which has imbued the Samoans' Rugby World Cup journey with more than a touch of the crusading spirit. "To Fats and the Boys," says one from the Western Samoan Visitors' Bureau, "Read aloud Philippians, Chapter 4, Verse 13. I can do all things through Christ which streogthen me." From the Boys' Brigade of Western Samoa: "We are still behind the curtains io prayers for the team." lotercepting the latest the most pleasant tasks of the day for Tate Simi, the team manager, who would otherwise be contemplating another day at the Labour Commission offices io Apia, the capital of Samoa.

Simi rises early, partly because he cannot sleep, partly because he does oot want to miss one second of the adventure. "I lie awake thinking about what we have The World Cup has been shaken and stirred by a Pacific island team that is making done. It was a pipedream score, and the Samoans before, but now we are competing with the top nations and with our success, rugby is oot just a pastime for Samoans anymore, it's becoming part of the culture." So much so that at Iam tomorrow, Westero Samoan time, 20,000 people will flock to the main stadium in Apia to watch the quarter-final against Scotland. No rugby is played on a Sunday in the islands, but strict observance of the day has been set aside for observance of a different kind. Courtesy of Television New Zealand, who installed a satellite dish in Apia, the Samoans have watched their team live on screen for the first time. So many have done so, two extra screens have had to be added to the five already in the stadium. They are travelling miles by bus from the villages to be there," Simi said, "And the good thing is that a lot of us too. It's not just the oew rugby generation."

"Fats", (Peter Fatialofa, the captain) and "the Boys", of course, are loving every minute of the exposure. For a race which has repelled, absorbed and survived generations of foreign influence - from the United States, Germany, France and New Zealand - this is a heavensent opportunity to even the into people. "Samoans are combative, warrior-like. That's why they like rughy. Soccer is regarded as a namby-pamby game."

Williams has harnessed this enthusiasm to the limit. A little beyood, some of the Argentinians might say. Tackling can be taught, but really aggressive tackling is instinctive. If you have 15 guys committed to the idea of knocking people over, that gets the opposition in two minds. The difference, I think, between us and some of the home teams is that we regard tackling as an offensive, not a defensive, weapon." Asked if he has been surprised at the reaction to the team's tackling Williams barely conceals a smile. "A little." Manu Samoa, the leg endary warrior whose spirit the team embodies, would share the smile and doubtless see eye to eye too with Fatiolafa, the most famous piano-shifter in rugby and the ootsize symbol of the Fatoalofa has seven sisters and eight brothers, which is a fair tonnage for the planet to shoulder, and his sevenyear-old son has inherited his father's instincts. "He has already been told to cool it by his teachers because he tackles too hard," he says. Fatialofa can hardly believe he will be leading his team into a World Cup quarterfinal this afternoon. "The whole thing has built up a momentum of its own." Like the man himself, that might take some stopping.

Tackling their task: Bachop embodies the Samoans' defensive determination during a training session in Scotland

Wallabies fail to hold their own

France is not exactly taking them by storm in Australia, never mind that Australian scribes are dutifully filing their stories, correctly enough, that the Wallabies are favourites,

The majority of Australians are reaching for another beer and turning to the racing results, at least if the local press is any guide. There have been more stories here this week about John Walker's ambidon to run the minute mile than there have been about Nick Farr-James's injury.

While the Sydney Morning Herald's cutumoist, Evan Whitton, was reflecting on Tues-day on a majority of Europe's rugby writers fancying Australia 10 wio the Webb Ellis Cup ahead

BOXING

Move up on the cards for Angol

By SRIKUMAR SEN BOXING CORRESPONDENT

IF DEREK Angol, the British and Commonwealth cruiserweight champion and world No. 3, is disappointed he has still not received the recognition be deserves, he may find consolation in the fact that before too long he could be the man to step into the shoes of Lennox Lewis, Britain's exciting world heavyweight contender.

Angol's manager, Terry Law-less, and matchmaker. Mickey Duff, believes he would be an excellent heavyweight prospect if he fills out nicely in the next 12 to 18 months.

12 to 18 months.
"I think he will make a good heavyweight," Duff said. "He can certainly fight heavyweights, He is higger than many British heavyweights that fought for the world title, bigger than Henry Cooper. Not many heavyweights would give him trouble."

Technically, Angol is one of the better boxers in Britain. He looked good beating Dave Rus-sell, of Australia, at the Elephant and Castle Leisure Centre on Thursday. It was a typically near performance. Angol caught the shaven-headed, over-tatooed, too-macho Australian with every punch in the book, and finished him off with a perfect left book.

"He would have no trouble getting up to 15 stone," Lawless said. "But it would have to be done properly." However Law-less said that before Angol moves up it will help if be had a world title. By next summer he should be a champion.

Angol said after his bout with Russell: "I am hulking myself up and my body will tell me whether I have to go up to heavyweight. But I want to win a cruiserweight world fitle first. It does not matter against who. It's like driving. Once you qualify you can go anywhere."

Duff will be going to the world boxing organisation convention in Miami in December to push Angol's case for a challenge for the title held by Magna Havna,

Boardman girded for time trial

THE curtain comes down tomorrow on the season's main time trial programme with Chris Boardman going for his fourth victory in the Dunlopillo hilly 29-mile event at Sawley, North Yorkshire, against 42 other riders (Peter Bryan writes).

Boardman is only a week away from the defence of his British hill elimb title but refuses to be rattled by a rare climbing defeat last Sunday by Jeff Wright, better known as an all-rounder.

Even champions have their limitations: Boardman prefers long climbs taking about four minutes. He succumbed to Wright on what he termed a "sprint hill" and went to the line half expecting to be beaten.

Tomorrow's trial is on a 24mile circuit which takes in Sawley Bank and Grantley Bank followed by a five miles finish-ing circuit linking Fountains Abbey and Grantley Bank.

Yet for all his bravery, intelligent running, explosive power, six foot physique and eye for goal, Shearer lacks the instinctive talent, the inherent ball skills, of iodividuals like Matthew Le Tissier, his Southampton colleague. He compensates with

The finished product, but he is worth a lot more points a season to this club than someone who is brilliant for 20 minutes but then fades or hides. He is a grafter, who is full of aggression and enthu-siasm for his work. He is going to get an awful lot better and, from a manager's viewpoint. he is ideal to work with."

Shearer is presently working at modelling himself on Mark Hughes, the Manchester United and Wales centre forward, of whom he says: "He is so strong and good at turning defenders. I have never actually met him but I love Mark's game."

As for his own game, he said: "I can improve things like my first touch, but am working on it. I know I have the potential to play for England, but I also realise that it is up to me. I am capable of reaching the top, but will have to work hard to get there."

Paul Mortimer weers a Palace shirt for the first time since £500,000 transfer to south London, from Aston Villa on Thursday, against a Coventry side which her confounded the doubters by reaching fifth place in the table. Terry Butcher's team owe much of their success to Peter Atherton, a central defender signed from Wigen for £400,000, who impressed for England under-21 last Tuesday, and is 8kely to shedow Mark Bright, the Palace leading scorer, and Paul Furlong, a profite forward bought from Enfield for £100,000. At the opposite end, Marco Gabbiadhia needs to prove he really is worth £1.8 million. London, from Aston Villa on

Tour will provide a living

A NEW British tour, with 20 tournaments and prize-money of £80,000, was launched by the Lawn Tennis Association yes-terday (Andrew Longmore

The year-long tour, which will upgrade many of the traditional tournaments in the British calendar, is designed to case the difficulties in graduating from junior to senior level, provide good class competition and enable more British players to carn a living from the game.

The tournaments will be open to overseas players, but there will be a bonus pool of £10,000 for the British players only,

"Though no computer points are available, the circuit will provide enough prize money for players to live reasonably, without necessarily having to wait for sponsorship or a hand-out," John Feaver, LTA Director of events and lournaments, said. The LTA hope the first event will be before the end of the year and that each tournament will receive up to £2,500 from the LTA for prize money, a sum which will be matched by the events themselves from sponsorship or hospitality.

Parc des Princes ready for World Cup storm

English forwards key to explosive match-up in Paris

From DAVID HANDS RUGBY CORRESPONDENT

PARIS, swept by rain, held its breath yesterday. Today a storm of some kind will break over the Parc des Princes, because the Rugby World Cup will lose one of the two countries. France or England, who have dominated European rugby over the last three years and a coocluding line may be drawn under some distinguished careers.

The two quarter-finals to-morrow, in Dublin and Lille, look clear-cut by comparison if the standards of excellence customarily applied by Australia and New Zealand are sustained against Ireland and Canada, respectively; Scotland's encounter with Western Samoa in Edinburgh today has been slightly clouded by injury, but here in Paris, insofar as is possible for one side playing on home ground. France and England begin with no obvious advantage.

The French see one primary obstacle; the English forwards. To make an analogy, local taxi drivers have complained that the police are concentrating radar speed traps on the expressways around Paris while paying little beed to those who roar madly up and down the Champs Elysees. The French belief appears to be that if England's pack can be arrested, their backs can be

Not that they do oot appreciate the likes of Will Carling, Jeremy Guscott and Rory Underwood; they just do oot believe England are prepared to use them. There has been a stage further, Eric Champ, the French pack leader, said this week that running into a packed Parc des Princes would resemble an "electric shock. We are like grenades, ready to explode". It is as though what has happened in the toursquib. The sudden expulsion of breath today could be ferocious, in oo area more than at the back of the lineout, where Mickey Skinner must

Yet France have opted to change their forward line-up by introducing Marc Cecilloo for Abdelatif Benazzi, Having much debate instead about consciously kept together the lioeout strategy, kicking from same 15 players (allowing for half back - the chandelles, as injury and the reintroductioo out the pool matches, they have chosen to disrupt their lineout organisation, perhaps to concede the front of the line, so that Cecillon's greater strength can be used at close quarters. It will be fascinating to see if, at any stage, the French attempt to introduce Benazzi, who played so well on his Twickenham debut in "England," Cecillon, who

of Philippe Sella, their vital midfield organiser) through-

has not played for over a mooth, said, "are like a great machine which must be given no time to get going. My job must be to contest the ball on the ground, at the mauls and protect Roumat at the lineout." But no less an authority than Pierre Berbizier, the Agen scrum half whom many would prefer to see oo the pitch rather than answering readers' queries in L'Equipe, believes that France have as at stake.

Taking the explosive simile cohesion they have developed against Romania, Fiji and

Moreover, injury has forced France to assemble a oew halfback pairing, England, though noting his speed off the mark have not been over-impressed by the speed of Galthie's nament hitherto, for both, has decision-making and Lacroix, been something of a damp at stand-off half, is also firstchoice place-kicker - a heavy responsibility since Didier Camberabero, his predecessor (who insists that his rib injury need oot have stopped his playing) has accumulated 332 international points.

What, then, of the English? Talking of aothorities, John Hart, New Zealand's cocoach, suggested in Lille oo Thursday that the two changes to the side were ones be would Richards and Heslop for Oti.

Carling, the captain, yesterday emphasised his belief that there was far more to come from England than has yet seen; that having underachieved against New Zea-land, they did no more than was required to beat Italy and the United States.
"You haven't seen one of the favoured sides going flat out yet," Carling said, "This side is one that can win the World Cup and up to now there has been a reserve, mentally. I think we are as good as anyone at our best, but t depends on producing it on Certainly, there are no bogys lurking in English minds. Twelve of them have experienced victory in Paris and all but Heslop and Leonard have previous experience of the ground. Winterbottom has worn England's colours there on five occasions, Underwood on four and there is a hard-nosed confidence that they can weather whatever France can hand out and then impose themselves.

Whether that imposition, in the 67th game between the countries, comes through the backs, as well as the forwards, may depend upon the elements. It will be sad if today we say farewell to Serge Blanco but I think, perhaps,

The face of defeat: dispirited Woosnam, crushed 7 and 6 yesterday at Wentworth

By MITCHELL PLATTS GOLF CORRESPONDENT

NICK Faldo yesterday came through a prodigious en-counter with Colin Montgomerie at Wentworth to maintain his hopes of regain-ing the Toyota World Match Play Championship he won in
